The economic conditions that necessitate the construction of very high buildings on narrow lots first emerged as a decisive factor in New York City. Intensive land use, with the resulting speculative traffic in real estate, was itself a consequence of more powerful and pervasive forces. Industrial expansion was the primary factor, and in the period following the American Civil War much of that expansion continued to be concentrated in New England and the Middle Atlantic states. Financial institutions had long been located mainly in Boston, but the center was rapidly shifting to New York around the time of the War. A new pattern of close interdependence among industries demanded centralization of business administration. The leadership of New York City as an ocean port, along with its proximity to major arteries of land transportation, was a local factor that helped to make the city an irresistible magnet. Its power to attract, once established, has never waned; even today it is a primary administrative and banking center. The financial resources for the high building were there; the development of safe elevator transportation and the organization of construction facilities soon made them a reality.

(A) Buying Real Estate for Speculation in New England
(B) The Development of New York City as a Business Center
(C) New Patterns of Transportation in the Middle Atlantic States
(D) The Building Construction Industry during the American Civil War

(A) It became too expensive to build on large lots.
(B) Old land-use restrictions had never been changed.
(C) Hookups for electric power were narrowly spaced.
(D) Heavy traffic conditions made it necessary to widen streets.
- 33 According to the passage, business interests came to New York City because _____.
(A) most manufacturing cities were located close by
(B) land and sea transportation routes converged there
(C) the real estate business was highly developed there
(D) nearby mineral resources facilitated industrial development
- 34 Which of the following did NOT contribute to the rapid construction of high-rise buildings in New York City?
(A) the expansion of industry (B) improved elevator systems
(C) sufficient monetary backing (D) the increased availability of land
- 35 The paragraph preceding the passage most probably discusses _____.
(A) the social and economic factors affecting architecture
(B) the influence of weather conditions on urban architecture

(D) the engineering principles necessary in the construction of elevators

All whales fall into two groups, those with teeth and those without. Both beluga and dolphins belong to the suborder of toothed whales known as Odontoceti, along with porpoises, narwhales, pilot whales, killer whales, and the largest toothed creature in the world, the sperm whale. Size differences among the Odontoceti are remarkable. A common porpoise will run only 4 or 5 feet in length and 300 pounds in weight; a sperm whale may be 10 times as long and 300 times as heavy. The beluga falls in between, weighing up to 2,000 pounds. And it does chirp. In fact, it makes a great variety of squeaking, whistling, and clicking sounds, which have earned it the name of sea canary. The toothless, or baleen, whales belong to the suborder of Mysticeti. This is a group of generally large whales, formerly abundant in all the oceans of the world. Though reduced by hunting, most species are still found along the coasts of the United States and Canada. All but two of the Mysticeti reach 40 feet or more at maturity, with the blue whale running up to 100 feet and tipping the scales at up to 130 tons. This whale is by far the largest creature that has ever lived on the Earth, 4 times the weight of the largest dinosaur, and 30 times that of an elephant.

- 36 With what topic is the passage mainly concerned?
(A) Breeding habits of whales (B) Efforts to preserve whales
(C) The intelligence of whales (D) Differences between whales
- 37 The author compares the beluga whale with _____.
(A) a bird (B) a giant (C) an elephant (D) a submarine
- 38 According to the passage, the suborder of Mysticeti is distinguished from the suborder of Odotoceti by the absence of _____.
(A) ears (B) fins (C) color (D) teeth
- 39 Which of the following is mentioned by the author as a reason why the baleen whale population has been reduced?
(A) disease (B) hunting
(C) insufficient supply of food (D) increased pollution of the seas
- 40 According to the passage, which of the following accurately describes the relative sizes of two whales?
(A) The beluga is larger than the blue whale.
(B) The porpoise is larger than the killer whale.
(C) The blue whale is larger than the sperm whale.
(D) The killer whale is larger than the sperm whale.
