People around the world expressed shock and outrage over a series of 36 attacks in Paris which left many dead. The attacks began shortly before lunchtime on January 7th, when a pair of gunmen entered the offices of satirical magazine Charlie Hebdo and opened fire on everyone they encountered. In a matter of minutes, twelve people were dead and another ten were wounded, five of whom were in serious condition. When the assailants exited the building, they were 37 by a police officer in the street, whom they also shot to death before fleeing the scene 38 those killed in the magazine's offices were some of the nation's most prominent political cartoonists along with a noted economist.

It quickly became apparent that the attackers were Islamist 39 who were angry about a series of cartoons that the magazine had published which criticized the Muslim prophet Mohammed. Charlie Hebdo has had a long history of making fun of prominent political and religious figures and had been threatened and even attacked in the past. The scale and brutality of this attack, however, seemed to take everyone by surprise. After a two-day manhunt, the attackers were eventually surrounded by police and killed in an exchange of gunfire as they tried to escape. A day after the attack on the magazine, a separate gunman, working in 40 with the other two, shot a policewoman to death before taking a number of people hostage in a supermarket. That attacker was also killed by police, but not before murdering four of his captives.
